I'm Sorry

Bob: This is Bob and Jay here at the Smith residence where Mr. Smith should be pulling into the driveway any minute.

Jay: That's right Bob. Today we could witness the setting of a new world record. This could be the 10,000th time Mr. Smith has said, "I'm sorry," to his wife without meaning it.

Bob: As we all know, many people use the phrase, "I'm sorry" not because they have any intention to change their actions, but simply to keep others from being mad at them.

Jay: That's right, Bob. When the Bible tells us to repent of our sins, it not only means to acknowledge we've done wrong, but to also turn around and stop doing the wrong.

Bob: Wait here he comes now, this could be the moment.

Jay: This is exciting, a new world record in the making...

Bob: He's coming up to the front door.

Jay: He's opening the door.

Larry: Hi Honey, I'm home.

Wife: Dear, you're an hour late.

Larry: Yeah, I should have called you. I'm sorry.

Sound: DA DA DA DA DA!!!!

Bob & Jay: There it is folks! A new world record!

Announcer: When you say you're sorry, do your actions show you mean it?
