Old Friend

- Wife: What is that, your yearbook?
- Husband: Yeah. You remember Jim?
- Wife: Your best friend in high school?
- Husband: Yeah. I saw him driving today downtown. I waved at him, but he must not have recognized me.
- Wife: I haven't heard you mention him for years. You guys were on the track team together.
- Husband: Oh yeah, we used to meet every morning down at the track to run laps. If it weren't for him I wouldn't have made the team.
- Wife: Didn't you guys buy a car together?
- Husband: Oh yeah! That thing cost us fifty bucks each. We spent all summer making plans on where we were going to drive. We were going to drive to from like Canada, to Mexico and all over. We spent more time planning the route than fixing the car. Ah, it was the best summer ever.
- Wife: What ever happened to you two? You guys were inseparable.
- Husband: I don't know. We hung out together after graduation for a while. But, it just seemed like he was always busy with his job or found other things to do. After awhile it just became awkward, like we didn't know each other anymore.
- Announcer: Relationships that don't grow closer through the years tend to vanish with the years. Is your relationship with God growing?
