All of Them Are Money

Kirt: Mr. Johnson, let me explain this again, your mortgage is 1000 dollars.

Jason: And I sent you two 500-dollar bills.

Kirt: That was Monopoly money. Just like the 1000 Bongo Burger Bucks you sent last month, they're not worth anything.

Jason: Excuse me, but you can buy one fry and get another free.

Kirt: Mr. Johnson, we only accept real money.

Jason: Monopoly money, Bongo Bucks, Dollar bills... They all the same. Come on, they all have dollar signs on them.

Kirt: They may all claim to be a form of payment, but only one of them has value here.

Jason: That is so narrow. If everyone was just a little more open to different forms of payment, we would all be a lot richer.

Kirt: The truth is you need to use real money or you will lose your home.

Announcer: There comes a point in life when we have to deal with reality. Believing what you want to believe about God may feel good during your lifetime, but in the end only truth will matter. Make sure what you believe is true.
